The Coronation Scot was built in accordance with the prototype for the new LMS 'Princess Royal' class. With a maximum speed of 125 mph, the new locomotive was intended to be the UK's fastest passenger locomotive to compete with the 2-6-4T Pacific. When entering service in 1937, the Coronation Scot became an immediate success in terms of speed, reliability, comfort, and publicity. At that time, the LMS were using up 1,000 mph on their section of the West Coast Main Line. This meant that they needed a locomotive with a maximum speed of 100 mph, and a design speed of 75 mph to match the routes that they were about to operate. Due to heavy demand, the Coronation Scot was fitted with a number of significant improvements over its predecessor, the LMS 'Princess Royal'. These included larger drivers, a faster, smoother running wheel-set, curved windscreens and better lighting. The combination of these improvements and the addition of a 2-6-4T engine to the design meant that the new locomotive was quicker and more efficient than any other UK passenger locomotive. Equally importantly, the new locomotive was more reliable, and capable of pulling the huge trains of cars that now carried passengers for longer distances. The Coronation Scot, together with the Class 517, was the brainchild of Sir John Robinson, the Regional Director of the LMS West Coast Division. Many of the improvements that could be incorporated into the locomotive were brought about by other similar locomotives of various national origins. Most of these versions were powered by a 2-6-0 tender engine, but a number also featured a 2-6-4 tender engine. The first Coronation Scot locomotive was built in 1934 and 1935, with the first running in on the LMS West Coast Main Line on the 27th March 1937. With a maximum speed of 125 mph, the new locomotive was intended to be the UK's fastest passenger locomotive to compete with the 2-6-4T Pacific. This was the start of a long and successful career for the Coronation Scot, who became one of the most popular locomotives in the UK. In their heyday the locomotives formed the backbone of LMS services on the West Coast Main Line, together with classes 502, 517, 535, 536, 545 and 548.

I guess this is just another attempt by Pandemic to milk as much money out of it as possible. 5.99 seems almost a bargain price for a full set of cards. btw, been playing the beta version and it's great fun. Hopefully it does a decent job against the new 'Star Empire' expansion. Don't fall for the hype. Pandemic is a fine and deserving developer, but marketing to you seems a bit dishonest. They ship expansions every c9d1549cdd.
