Herein, we present the electrochemical behavior of pyridinium choride functionalized graphene as novel carrier materials for supercapacitor applications. Pyridinium choride functionalized graphene (Cys-graphene) was fabricated by the in situ solvothermal reduction of the pre-deposited GO nanosheets. The electrochemical behavior of the pyridinium choride functionalized graphene was investigated by cyclic voltammetry (CV) and electrochemical impedance spectroscopy (EIS). It was found that the onset oxidation potential and specific capacitance of the like clockwork, as rent prices rise and as companies pivot into test strips of innovation to help “meet the challenge” of attracting talent to the business, it never fails. As a PR and communications professional, I noticed the rush to new ideas to make the world a better place, to attract the best people and to improve retention have not slowed down in any way, which is as good of an indicator as any of the business climate. Companies continue to invest in PR and corporate communications for the simple reason it works. It works because it is based on facts, and facts are validated by clients that have data to back them up. It works because it is not necessarily about spinning or towing a company line, but, as the famous Shakespeare said, about the truth. It works because it is a strategic differentiator that enables companies to become better at what they do, and it works because people want to believe what you say. CPRC hears more about new social responsibility initiatives every year, and what we found particularly interesting were the “low-hanging fruit” opportunities. Many new initiatives, or at least ones that are receiving a lot of media coverage, focus on communities where people are most vulnerable, where people are most in need of help. I would hate to think what someone on a website where half a million people already have a Twitter account has to do to gain the attention of a social media or media outlet. But, if
