Q: Entity Framework 6 Code First - Using both DB context and data context together I have setup an application with two DbContexts (DbContextA and DbContextB) which are used by a single data context (DataContext). This is the set up: DbContextA is created by a controller action: `private DbContextA newDbContextA() { var context = new DbContextA(); // Configure Seed context.Database.Initialize(true); // Seed data SeedData(); return context; }` DbContextB is created by a repository: `private DbContextB newDbContextB() { var context = new DbContextB(); // Configure Seed context.Database.Initialize(true); // Seed data SeedData(); return context; }` DataContext is created by a repository: `private DataContext newDataContext() { var dataContext = new DataContext(); // Configure Seed dataContext.Database.Initialize(true); // Seed data SeedData(); return dataContext; }` The SeedData() method uses both the DbContexts by using the data context to get the data, and the DbContexts by calling DbSet members. My question is: Can I use the data context and DbContexts together without an interface and without using the static member DbSet in both? Like so: `public static DbSet Persons { get; set; }` Here is some pseudo code for reference:

A: this can be achieve by using methods in the following resources of android api. In android 6 and above, the methods to access user's information are like `getIdentifier()`, and `getUId()` A: To get the user name: `getUserName()` To get the user id: `getId()` A: As @Oliver Hanappi pointed out in his answer. You can use `Context.getUser()` to get current user. If you only want to get the name, not the id, use `userManager.getName()` In the prior art, the manufacture of a baked product typically occurs using a microprocessor that establishes pre-determined operational parameters according to one or more preselected recipes stored in a memory unit. Once the preselected recipe is established, the microprocessor initiates an appropriate sequence of steps, such as heating a wafer comprising the desired baked product to an elevated temperature, applying a predetermined time interval at that temperature, and cooling the wafer to a predetermined ambient temperature. This sequential cycle of steps is then repeated until the desired amount of the baked product is produced. Once the desired amount of the baked product has been produced, the wafer is typically separated from the oven and the microprocessor is used to record the temperature values for each portion of the wafer. It has been found that the time required to generate the desired amount of product from a wafer of a given size is directly related to the temperature of the wafer during the processing. However, once the wafer is removed from the oven, it is usually not possible to measure the temperature of the wafer at various locations thereon, and thus the temperature of the wafer cannot be adjusted in order to improve the amount of product being produced from a given wafer.Q: Algorithm for assigning values to keys in a dictionary based on a set of rules I have a data model that I am writing a web application based on.
