 The "MeChip" will be upgraded several times, so the MeChip will be different from game to game. Be aware that in the early stages, the player will not be able to reach the desired level and the MeChip will not have many available options, but the whole content will be adding as new MeChip phases are released. In order to progress, the player will need to make choices. The game will be divided into missions and challenges, and the player can succeed at each mission/challenge successfully to unlock the next mission/challenge. Only one mission/challenge can be completed at a time, and it will reset the MeChip if the player fails to complete it. If the player is not sure what to do, he can look at the "Hint" button in the screen.  The player's level will also influence the strength of the MeChip that will be randomly generated and sent to the player (see Mechip Generations below).  There will be special MeChip phases, such as the "Only MeChip" phase, in which there will be few other options except the MeChip.

1. Stats Measure your statistics (Wisdom, Strength, Constitution) and your energy (Health). At the beginning of the game, your stats will be set to 10. Your energy will be set to 10, and you will have one ability point. Energy: Energy is measured in a number of "Energy Points", and may be increased or decreased by your daily use of various abilities or potions, or items such as pots. Your energy points may also be increased by special items you may find, but they will deplete if you don't use them. You can see your current energy in yellow, and the amount of energy you have will be displayed in the game. Stat: Your Wisdom, Strength, and Constitution will increase each time you successfully complete a level, and continue to increase at a rate of 1 point per 7,000 coins.
2. Freeplay There will be over 70 challenges to test your strength. Once you have completed a challenge, your level of satisfaction will be recorded, and depending on your satisfaction level, the next challenge will be unlocked. Once you have completed the 70 challenges, you will be presented with the campaign mission.
3. Campaign Game "The Hero Project: Open Season - MeChip Warning System 9.0" Campaign: The player will encounter 4 dungeons: The Underworld The Hive The Immortal Youth

Forget the fact the game is broken (which also makes it unplayable), that there is a glaring bug that will wipe out all progress within minutes (and thus is not fixed), that the framerate grinds to a screeching halt for no discernible reason (which is corrected), that the difficulty curve is essentially meaningless (which is corrected), that the artwork is atrocious and the level design is contrived (which is not). There is just one thing really wrong with this game. That's right! Unplayable! The Good: Okay, before we get into this, I want to make clear that I love Jonathan Blow. I don't agree with every position he takes politically, but he's a fucking genius. I'm enjoying this game. Playing it every day. It's funny to me, because on every other level it feels like a perfectly crafted piece of art. Yet here it is frustratingly broken, and I really don't understand why. The world is amazing. Imagine walking around an island as it slowly rotates and you fly across the land. It's something of a marionette show, except the marionette is screaming with rage. You get thrown into absurd plot points, with the force of waves of tidal action. There's a town that has lost half its buildings. There's a guy who won't stop beating his wife. There's a rabbi who is convinced that humans are falling into the pits of Hell by their own hands. There's a village full of people raised from the dead by a miracle, only for them all to kill each other while it's happening and to have their heads exploded by a giant worm that crawled out of their stomachs. There is a sense of crazy inevitability in the world. Somehow, we are supposed to play this game, and a sense of irrationality and rebellion is built in as you make your way through a world of many layers. This is of course familiar territory to the writer: the framework of rational/irrational is built into the narrative of many works of modern or classical literature. As the author of Braid, it's also a world he built. A word about the story: you play as a man named Alexander who is telekinetic (he can move objects by thinking about them, not directly). He's locked up in an insane asylum until the game starts, having been tortured and emotionally crippled. You and another man named Enoch have been holding him
